

ABSTRACT

It was found that nucleic acids or proteins can be effectively differentiated and identified, without being particularly restricted
5 by the number of types of those nucleic acids or proteins, by binding them to a large scale integrated circuit (LSI) which is externally writable and readable without contact, and recording the nucleic acid or protein information on the LSI.